Capt. Parsell was asked about the reported race between the Majestic and the American line steamship Paris on the last east bound voyage.

The British skipper positively refused less two rooms. So little was left of furniture and clothing that on entering I thought the apartment unoccupied. There was absolutely nothing to eat. Perhaps some kind neighbor (the poor have large hearts) would have given a little bread and tea to the starving woman, and perhaps she would have been hungry all night and unable to sleep in consequence, the poor baby sharing her discomfort. I relieved their immediate wants and promised to look in again to see the improvement in health and spirits. The mother beamed with delight, and wished she could thank the readers of "The Evening World" as they deserved for being so good to her baby."

Every reader who is good to one baby is helping to better the condition of thousands of poor, sick bables. Last month more than 1,400 were helped; in the last five years 100.000 were treated, and most of them cured. This year at least 20,000 of the most helpiess and deserving little members of society will be cared for, clothed or fed and "joilied up," if you help.

Subscriptions are in order now. They may be addressed for the Bables to the cashler of "The World," and will enroll the giver on the subscription list at the head of this column.
